Service Eligibility

You are eligible for support from this service if:

- You or a family member have experienced, used or are alleged to have used family violence in your relationship; and
- You need legal assistance with family law, child protection or family violence intervention orders.

FASS Duty Lawyer Service

The FASS duty lawyer may be able to:

- Provide legal advice, information and referrals in relation to family law, family violence and child protection matters
- Negotiate with the other party to sort out arrangements for children
- Help to sort property problems after separation
- Help prepare court documents to initiate or respond to family law proceedings in urgent parenting matters. This can include orders to recover children or to place children on the

AFP Family Law Watch List to prevent children being taken out of Australia

- Assist with subpoenas to gather evidence about the family violence
- Provide representation in urgent interim matters where there are allegations of family violence.

FASS Social Support Service

The FASS social worker can help with:

- Safety planning and risk management when attending court, at home and in the community
- Providing court support before, during and after court
- Providing warm referrals to relevant service providers for counselling, financial, accommodation and other services that can assist.
